BREAKING: Buzzfeed Buys the Broadside

by Hayden Smith ('18)

Following lengthy negotiations, an agreement has been reached that will allow the media company Buzzfeed to buy and rebrand the HHS Broadside as a branch of Buzzfeed News. In exchange, Dresden School District will receive 25 cents to supplement the school budget. Under the deal, the paper will be completely reorganized to fit the style of reporting that is befitting of such a prestigious news source like Buzzfeed.

"We want to deliver the news that really matters to the Hanover High student body," said Buzzfeed CEO Jonah Peretti in a public statement. "You know, the things that students really care about like quizzes that would allow them to figure out which Dance Moms character they would be or the list of "17 Things Only Color-Blind Vegans Can Understand." Almost automatically, he quickly added, "You won't believe number seven!"

Behind the scenes, however, there were other reasons for the company's acquisition of the Broadside. "Hanover High is fertile ground for advertising revenue since so many students have nothing better to do," said one Buzzfeed financial executive. "We've managed to infiltrate almost every student's FaceBook account but that is not enough. That is why we bought the Broadside. Even though the number of readers is miniscule, we intend to squeeze every last click we can out of Hanover High," she continued. "Every. Last. Click."

Although student activity on Buzzfeed is high, reactions to the news have been mixed. "Wait, we have a school newspaper?" 20 students said. "Nobody cares about the Broadside!" roared junior Kezar Berger as he attempted to drag the author of this article away from a Broadside staff meeting. Even Broadside writer Danny Rorke had something to say: "At least we aren't being bought by Tumblr."

HHS To Offer New "Hip" Class

by Daniel Rorke ('18)

A new class is arriving at Hanover High that is sure to generate a storm of controversy. Several students have joined forces with Senor Shaheen to run an Advanced Memeology class next year. This class will focus on the fine art of "Memery", studying such subjects as Rare Pepe Preservation, hunting wild memes in their natural habitat, the history of memes, how to tell if a meme is Dank or Fake, and how memes affect our modern culture. "I've always been interested in memes," says teacher Jean Shaheen, "It started when my tennis team started using text acronyms while talking to each other, which at the time I thought was ludicrous and unbecoming. However, as time went on, I came to see that memes are never going away, and are, in fact, the key to understanding the youth of our nation". Senor was later heard stating that the class was going to be "Lit af", and would "only discuss the dankest and spiciest of maymays". The students involved declined to give a statement, but an anonymous tip was submitted claiming that the class was "just a prank, bro", and that "Senor is really blowing this out of proportion. We never thought he would actually do it". Council is currently entering its four hundred and twentieth week of deliberation concerning the academic value of such a class.

Mysterious Language To Be Added As Foreign Language Option

by Stephan Wang ('20)

Supak! That's "Hello!" in Atlantean. Recently, the Foreign Language department has taken particular interest in Atlantis, an island supposedly rendered by Plato in passed down stories from his ancestors. Incorporating the island's language into Hanover's curriculum would give students a completely new insight on both history and language. The class will be a small seminar, and because spots are limited, the pool of interested students will be selected only by lottery. The teacher of the class is still undecided, but it is up to the students to elect one. In the class, there are NO tests, quizzes, or a midterm/final! 100% of the grade is weighted on homework completion. All this is due to tremendous affluence of knowledge the language has to offer, and the foreign language department doesn't want to create too much stress. So, consider the option to take Atlantean 1 starting from the 2018-19 school year! (Unfortunately, Atlantean 1 is the only Atlantean class, so keep in mind about switching languages)

Hanover High School to Become "Musical School"

by Daniel Zegans ('18)

According to undisclosed sources in council, a motion recently passed which would make intermittent choreographed dance numbers mandatory. Regarding the motion, Mr. Campbell said, "After seeing the masterpiece that is High School Musical, I decided that the pep and skill shown by the students in that film is exactly the kind of energy I want in HHS."

The motion is expected to be put into action soon, and students will be graded on the quality of their dancing and singing. Less than exceptional dancing will be met with immediate suspension, with a possibility of being expelled. We here at the Broadside suggests you start practicing your performances soon.
